"There was no place for him among the Masters, since a new Master Summoner had been chosen, a not come, and he soon slept in sheer weariness. He woke in the first, cold light. He sat up and Otter pointed at the low slope that rose before them. "The King's House is there," he said. Medra bowed his head, standing there. "Anieb," he said, "can you come back this far? I don't know the way." He waited a while. He saw darkness, heard silence. Slow and halting, he entered the passage..ever seen anyone. He saw the thin arms, the swollen joints of elbow and wrist, the childish nape. The Creation of Ea contains no clear references to an original unity and eventual separation of dragons and humans, but this may be because the poem in its presumed original form, in the Language of the Making, dated back to a time before the separation. The best evidence in the poem for the common origin of dragons and humans is the archaic Hardic word in it that is commonly understood as "people" or "human beings," alath. This word is by etymology (from the True Runes Atl and Htha) "word-beings," "those who say words," and therefore could mean, or include, dragons. Sometimes the word used is alerath, "true-word-beings," "those who say true words," speakers of the True Speech. This could mean human wizards, or dragons, or both.
